Old trucker just keeps on jammin' at 93

July 8 (UPI) — A 93-year-old Iowa man might soon become a Guinness World Record-holder for being the world's oldest truck driver.

Orrin Asmus, who will turn 94 in August, has been driving trucks since he was 19 years old, and has worked for McLaughlin Freight for the past 11 years.

Dan McLaughlin, president & co-owner of McLaughlin Freight, had Asmus submitted to Guinness World Records after a coworker checked online and discovered he might be the world's oldest truck driver.

The current record was set by Doyle Archer, who was 92 years old when his record was updated in December 2025. He first earned the title at the age of 90 in 2024. Asmus has driven more than 5 million miles in his more than 70 years on the job, and has hauled cargo through every state except Hawaii and Alaska.

Back in time to Central Valley roots

The San Joaquin County Historical Museum will host a grand opening celebration on Saturday, July 25 from 9am to 1:00pm for the new Pioneer Village, an immersive history education space and the new home of the Museum's award-winning Valley Days and Pioneer School education programs.

The event will feature live entertainment, bluegrass music, hands-on pioneer activities, historical demonstrations, and guests will be able to explore the Pioneer Village. Local food vendors Costa's Kettle Corn, Peachy's Food to Go, and Odyssey Coffee will have food and beverages available for purchase.

The first 500 guests will receive a complimentary celebration Bundtini provided by our special event partner, Nothing Bundt Cakes of Lodi. This will also be the final day to see the exhibit "San Joaquin County: 175 Years of Growing Greatness." Admission is free and there is a $6 per car fee to enter Micke Grove Park (free for Members). For more information, call (209) 331-2055.

The Pioneer Village project has been a dream of the San Joaquin County Historical Museum and its Docent Council since the earliest days of the Valley Days and Pioneer School programs. For sixty years, the San Joaquin County Historical Museum has worked to preserve, share, and celebrate the diverse histories of our county and to inspire future generations toward continued greatness. We are confident that the Pioneer Village will allow us to continue this important work on an even greater scale.

The Pioneer Village will dramatically improve the historic atmosphere, efficiency, accessibility, and safety of our many living history programs including Valley Days, Pioneer School, and Farm to Fork. By centralizing the many activities of these programs in one immersive space, we can transport visitors "back in time" and give them an even better and more memorable experience. The facilities constructed as part of this project will also allow us to more effectively reach the community through weekend and summer programming.

New, creatively designed activity buildings such as the Blacksmith Shop, Cookshack, Harness Shop, Print Shop, Farmhouse, and others will allow us to serve more and larger student groups. They will also provide better educational demonstrations and improve the historical authenticity of our programming. The Pioneer Village will feature modern amenities and accessibility while retaining all the charm of a 19th-century Central Valley town.

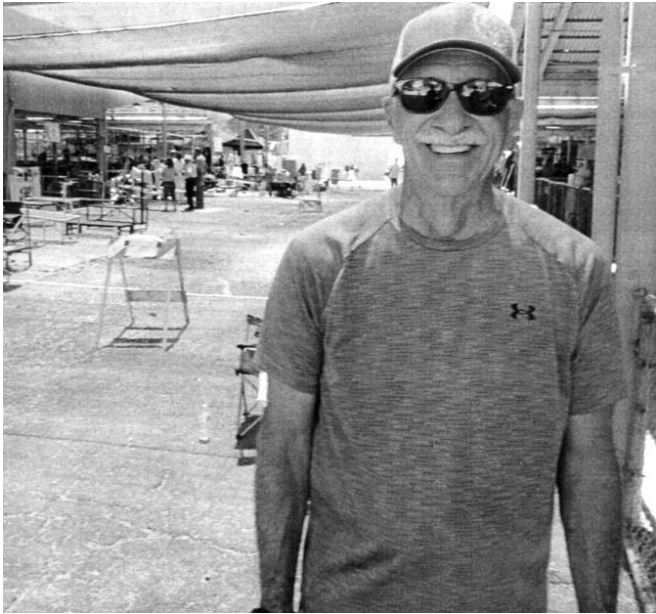

The Pioneer Village will also include two new multi-use spaces. The area will allow for activity space during inclement weather and air conditioning will provide greater opportunities for summer programming. The Pioneer Village has also been thoughtfully designed to connect with the existing Sunshine Trail, Delta Water Path, Charles Weber Cottage, and Calaveras Schoolhouse to create a more immersive and integrated educational experience.

"We are confident that the Pioneer Village will allow us to better serve our community and inspire even greater numbers of youth to know and appreciate their history as citizens of San Joaquin County," said a Mickie Grove representative. "We are excited to finally see this decades-long dream be realized thanks to the hard work and dedica-

"Papa," he asked in the innocent voice of a four-year-old, "how long will it take you to forget something?"

Puzzled and intrigued, I responded, "Well, Keller, I'm not sure. Sometimes I forget right away and sometimes I think about things for a long, long time."

Just as puzzled and intrigued as I was, he then asked, "When you were a little boy did you ever break something and hide it? And when your Papa found it and got mad how long did it take him to forget that you broke something?"

"Oh my, Keller, I'm not sure I remember. Did something go wrong?" I asked.

"I broke Nonie's cup and hid it under the bed and I want her to forget about it and not be mad at me," came his answer.

David was aware that his sin had damaged his relationship with God. He sensed God's displeasure with him and his feelings of guilt overwhelmed him and added to his problem. He knew why God "hid His face" from him.

But those feelings changed. Why? He repented, cried for God's mercy and knew that he was forgiven. When he had God's mercy he said, "You turned my wailing into dancing ... and I will give You thanks forever."

We all have experiences like Keller and David. We do something wrong, feel guilty, are filled with fear and want to know how long it will take to enjoy God's blessings once again. Like David, ask, pray and repent.

"The way a command is given affects the way the movement of the unit is executed," is the opening sentence in The Drill Pad. The importance of giving a proper military command is further described in The Army Study Guide: "A correctly delivered command will be understood by everyone ... and demands willing, correct and immediate response."

One wonders if the writers quoted above read what David wrote in Psalm 29: "The voice of the Lord is powerful ... and ... majestic!" Throughout this Psalm the results of "the voice of the Lord" are staggering. That phase - "the voice" - occurs seven times in this Psalm and coincides with the number of times that the same phrase appears in Genesis 1. Both passages of Scripture express one theme: "The glory, power and majesty of our God rest upon all of His creation." His might can be seen everywhere: the skies, the seas, on land, in the wilderness; in the mighty mountain ranges, the terrible results from bolts of lightening when they strike the earth. His power is seen when animals give birth to their young. He can even be seen in the desert regions! The glory of God is revealed wherever man looks!

Some may refuse to hear His voice or have no desire to respect the power in that voice. Those of us who do, however, are blest. Yet, we are left with two nagging questions: Why have we been chosen to see the power and majesty of God while others cannot see Him? And then, what is our obligation to God and to them?

Civil War loot is missing—buried in New Mexico?

Fact or Fiction: The Reynolds Gang and buried loot The search goes on By Marianne Mogon Correspondent

The “Old West” is defined somewhat by legends and tall tales. Some are even embellished with hints of still buried treasure or booty of ill-gotten gains. Park

County has its own version of a legend and the possibility of buried treasure hidden by a notorious gang.

During the years of 1861 to 1865, America was heavily involved in battling the Civil War. The war was fought in thousands of different places, from southern Pennsylvania to Texas, from New Mexico to the Florida coast. Most of the battles took place in Virginia and Tennessee.

The territory of Colorado was created in 1861, just before the Civil War began and Colorado was considered as a marginal pro-Union territory. Colorado was strategically important to both the Union and Confederacy because of the gold and silver mines. Both sides wanted to get their hands on the valuable minerals. One campaign, the New Mexico Campaign, was an attempt to gain control of the Southwest, including the gold fields of Colorado, the mineral-rich territory of Nevada and the ports of California. This Confederate campaign was intended to invade Colorado and to cut the supply lines between California and the rest of the Union. However, the Confederates were defeated in New Mexico, thus ending that campaign.

In the late 1850s, many Southerners had migrated to Colorado seeking their fortune in gold. When the War broke out, many returned to the South to defend their homes. Some of those who stayed formed militia groups in Fairplay, Leadville, Denver and Beulah. These Confederate Partisan Ranger units operated in Colorado Territory from 1861 to 1865, raiding supply wagon trains, disrupting communications lines, recruiting volunteers and skirmishing with Union troops.

In July 1864, things got a bit interesting in South Park. However, it is important to keep in mind that much of the remainder of this story is built on innuendos and embellishment, creative recollections, some verifiable history, and possibly plain mistruths. However, it makes for an interesting tale to tell.

The story begins in July of 1864 when Jim Reynolds and eight Confederate raiders terrorized South Park. Reynolds and his group were members of Company A of Wells’ Battalion of the Confederacy with official orders to disrupt Union supply trains and gather Confederate recruits from the mining camps. Reynolds and company showed up at the Guiraud’s ranch (now Bison Peak Ranch at Garo). One account says Reynolds and Adolphe Guiraud were old acquaintances. Reynolds told Guiraud he had written letters and needed to mail them. Guiraud told him a stage would be stopping near where Como is today.

However, other accounts claim that the gang attacked the Guiraud Ranch, stole horses, cash and molested Mrs. Guiraud.

The gang headed to Dan McLaughlin’s stage station, about eight miles out of Fairplay. They stole about $3,000 in cash, a gold watch and the horses. Then, heading over Kenosha Pass toward Denver, they robbed the Michigan House stage stop, taking more horses and cash.

This is where things start getting interesting and convoluted due to several different versions found and sketchy information. A gentleman by the name of Mr. Berry began to warn every one of the Reynolds gang and their thievery and tried to raise a posse without success. Not to be deterred, Mr. Berry followed the gang as far as the Omaha House stage station near present-day Conifer. From the Omaha House, the gang headed toward Shaffer’s Crossing.

Finally, a posse was organized, and on July 30, 1864, the outlaws were spotted camping in a forest in or around Geneva Gulch. A gunfight quickly ensued, leaving one outlaw, Owen Singletary, dead. The remaining outlaws escaped. One posse member, a Dr. Cooper, supposedly cut off Singletary’s head, took it back to Fairplay, preserving it in alcohol, where it supposedly remained for many years until it disappeared. One story claimed that quite a few years later, there was a fire in one of the mines near Fairplay and a severed head was found, which was identified as that of Singletary.

It was also said that after the gunfight, the gang buried their loot and split up. It was estimated that the gang had taken somewhere between $5,000 and $100,000, and area locals blamed them for every robbery within miles.

Yet another account said the gang was captured except for John Reynolds and Jack Stowe. Jim Reynolds, the ners traveled to the South Park area, trying to find the treasure. When they arrived at the site, they were disappointed to find that a forest fire had destroyed many of the in Laramie City, Wyoming Territory.

Cook provided the following quote of John Reynolds as told to Albert Brown: “Jim and me leader of the gang, was one of the ones captured. They were taken to Fort Lyon, the first stop on their way to Denver, for a military trial. However, they were subsequently executed while shackled to a tree. One account said it was a makeshift and reluctant firing squad under a Sergeant Williamson. One of the outlaws, John Andrews, was shot in the chest and left for dead. He managed to crawl to a nearby cabin and eventually healed and made his way to New Mexico to find John Reynolds and Stowe. He found them, and while attempting to steal some horses from a ranch, Stowe was killed in the skirmish and later a posse caught up with them and Andrews was killed. Reynolds managed to escape to Santa Fe and live under the assumed name of Will Wallace. After a few years, he became bored with his new lifestyle and met Albert Brown. The two of them went back to the holdup business until they decided to head to Denver to avoid getting caught.

While Reynolds and Brown were attempting to steal some horses near Taos, N.M., Reynolds was mortally wounded. On his deathbed, he shared the story of how the gang had buried their loot, to fellow outlaw Albert Brown. He supposedly drew a map which showed the site of the ambush and the vague location of the treasure. The story claimed that Reynold’s said, “find the horse, find the loot,” among his final words. It was purported that Brown and part-landmarks. One account claimed they found an old white hat that supposedly had belonged to the decapitated Singletary. They also found a headless skeleton and horse bones in a swamp, but they were unable to find the rocked-in prospect hole. Brown and his partners made three more attempts to find the treasure before giving up. During the time of Reynolds’ activity, a lawman named David J. Cook, who was appointed City Marshall of Denver, wrote of these events in his memoir, “Hands Up! or Thirty-five Years of Detective Work in the Mountains and on the Plains.” He chronicled the story of the Reynolds gang collaborating most of the story with a few extra details.

In his memoir, Cook tells that Albert Brown was arrested after an attempted robbery and ended up in Denver jail. Somehow, Cook ended up with the story and the map before Brown escaped from jail and later died in a drunken brawl buried the treasure the morning before the posse attack on Geneva Gulch. You go up above there a little ways and find where one of our horses mired down in a swamp. On up at the head of the gulch we turned to the right and followed the mountain around a little farther, and just above the head of Deer Creek, we found an old prospect hole at about timberline. There, we placed $40,000 in greenbacks, wrapped in silk oilcloth, and three cans of gold dust. We filled the mouth of the hole up with stones, and ten steps below, struck a butcher knife into a tree about four feet from the ground and broke the handle off, and left it pointing toward the mouth of the hole.”

It’s uncertain just what parts of the story are true, or if it’s another tall tale knitted and embellished from actual facts. But, by all accounts, the money remains buried somewhere in the South Park area.

Scientists Found a Massive Great White Shark Near Florida

The “great” in great white shark (Carcharodon carcharias) refers to the animal’s enormous size. But while we know they are quite large, how often do people actually get to see one in person? Well, recently, a team from OCEARCH bumped into the largest great white they’ve ever tagged, an ocean giant named “Contender.” Thanks to OCEARCH’s advanced tracking technology, we can now follow Contender across the ocean in real time!

Last year the research group OCEARCH located and tagged a gigantic male great white shark, now known as “Contender.” The shark’s name honors the Contender Boats that OCEARCH uses for their fieldwork. He was tagged approximately 40 miles off the coast of the Florida-Georgia border. Contender holds the title of the largest male white shark ever tagged by OCEARCH in the western North Atlantic. He weighs an impressive 1,653 pounds and is nearly 14 feet long. Scientists estimate that Contender is around 30 years old.

In November 2023, the OCEARCH team began their “Expedition Southeast” to learn more about great white sharks, including where they spend the winter and what they eat. The team recently returned to the waters off the southeastern U.S. once again to continue this mission. During their most recent trip, they encountered Contender. They successfully tagged the shark and collected important samples from it to learn more about sharks in this region.

The team used baited lines attached to buoys to attract Contender to the side of the boat. Once the shark took the bait, the lines detached cleanly, and the researchers followed the buoys to carefully guide the shark alongside the boat. They gently restrained the shark while veterinarians and researchers checked his health and collected small samples from it. During this process, the shark remained mostly submerged in the ocean water alongside the boat, allowing the fresh seawater to move over its gills. This helped the shark to breathe and stay comfortable.

The team quickly measured and weighed the enormous shark and gathered various biological samples, including blood, tissue, parasites, bacteria, fin clips, and sperm. Then, finally, Contender was fitted with a “SPOT” tag (Smart Positioning and Temperature tag) and released. While the health evaluation and tagging process might be a bit uncomfortable for the sharks, it doesn’t cause any harm. Data from the sharks’ tags show that they return to normal behavior and strong swimming within a few hours. Additionally, research indicates that this capture method causes much less stress compared to older techniques.

Why This Research Matters

For the SPOT tag to get an accurate location, it needs to be above the surface for about 90 seconds.

While finding and tagging a massive shark like Contender is certainly exciting, his contribution to education and the conservation of his species is only just beginning. The biological samples collected from Contender will help scientists assess the shark’s health, diet, genetics, and hormone levels. DNA analysis will also provide insights into the population structure, interactions, and genetic diversity of great white sharks. But one of the most extraordinary advancements in great white shark research today is Contender’s SPOT tag. The SPOT tag, which is attached to Contender’s dorsal (top) fin, lets researchers follow its movements and location. Every time his dorsal fin breaks the surface of the water, the satellite tag “pings” and sends tracking information back to OCEARCH, allowing the team to see where the shark is in real-time. By collecting these GPS locations, researchers can map Contender’s migration patterns and gain a better understanding of where great white sharks travel, the types of habitats they utilize, and their networks. In addition, the public can also follow Contender’s journey online or in the OCEARCH App.

A Giant Contribution to Conservation

Great white sharks live 40 to 70 years on average. Although we will have to wait to learn more from Contender’s tracking data and biological samples, scientists have already learned a lot about great white sharks from previous tagging efforts. Between 2012 and 2024, OCEARCH tracked 92 white sharks, which provided several key insights into their behavior. For example, great white sharks in the western North Atlantic tend to gather in Atlantic Canada and Cape Cod to feed during the summer months. The data also showed that great white sharks are more common near popular swimming beaches than previously thought, although encounters with humans in these areas remain rare.

The post Scientists Found a Massive Great White Shark Near Florida appeared first on A-Z Animals.

Great white sharks (otherwise known as great whites or white pointers) are famous for their distinctive fins and ferocious teeth! This apex predator needs impressive dentition to catch and eat prey in waters where it competes with other animals for food. But what are shark teeth made of, and how do they use them? You will discover this and a lot more about shark teeth right here.

These sharks are found worldwide in temperate and subtropical waters and often migrate seasonally. In the U.S., they can be found in the Atlantic Ocean from Maine to the Gulf of Mexico and the U.S. Caribbean, as well as in the Pacific Ocean from Alaska to California and Hawaii. Younger sharks are usually found nearer the shore, but mature individuals are also seen in offshore pelagic waters.

These are large animals – at maturity, they can reach 20 feet in length and can weigh over 4,000 pounds. To maintain this huge body, they eat about 0.5 to 3 percent of their total body weight per day. For an average weight of 2,750 pounds, this equates to 13.75 to 82.5 pounds of meat per day. They are opportunistic feeders who are willing to feed on a wide range of fish, marine invertebrates, and mammals. Juvenile great whites hunt bottom fish, smaller sharks, small rays, schooling fish, and squids. The adults can tackle seal and sea lion colonies and sometimes scavenge on whale carcasses. To catch, kill,

Great White Shark Jaws and Bite Force

This shark’s jaws are reinforced by layers of tough mineralized cartilage. Furthermore, their jaw muscles are arranged in a unique way that allows them to exert a very high bite force no matter how wide their mouth is open. This means they can powerfully bite down on prey of all sizes. Their upper and lower jaw muscles are divided by a tendon that pulls the muscle fibers straight and perpendicular to the jaw as the mouth opens. Using digital reconstruction models, scientists predict that the maximum bite force of a great white may reach 18,000 Newtons (4,000 pounds), amongst the highest known for any living species.

However, this phenomenal bite strength takes years to develop. Younger sharks have surprisingly weak jaws and would not be able to bite a chunk off a sea lion. Their jaws only strengthen once they reach about 10 feet in length, and their diet changes. What’s more, juvenile white sharks have a sub-terminal mouth (the lower jaw is shorter than the upper jaw and the opening is pointing downward), which is most effective for eating crustaceans and fish near the bottom. The adult’s mouths, however, are more terminal (pointing forward) and are better suited for grasping sea mammals.

Great white sharks rely on their teeth for survival from a very young age. They are born with teeth, and studies have found that even shark embryos have teeth. They are formed from specialized skin tissue on the jaw cartilage. Great white teeth are arranged in rows and attached to the jaws by connective tissue.

They are made from a very hard substance called enameloid covering a core of dentine (apatite and collagen). There are up to 28 exposed teeth in the upper jaw and up to 25 in the lower jaw, for about 50 visible teeth at any time.

However, below their gums, there are a lot more! Their ‘spare’ teeth are developing, folded back against the inside of the jaw. They are connected by collagenous and fibrous tissue and are not fixed into bone as in humans and many other mammals.

When a tooth is lost, another emerges from the gum to take its place. They can get through thousands of teeth in their lifetime. This process is called polyphyodonty and has been described as a conveyor belt. A great white shark can have around 300 teeth in total.

Juvenile shark teeth are pointed—just the right shape for grasping smaller prey, such as crustaceans, that can be swallowed whole. Adults, however, feed on sea lions and seals, and these cannot be swallowed whole. So, they have serrated, flat, triangular teeth that they can use for seizing prey. They use these deadly teeth to great effect, stripping fat and muscle from their prey’s bodies. They often release their prey several times, consuming it in multiple bites.

When a shark opens its mouth, its teeth (especially on the upper jaw) are moved forward by connective tissue. As the jaw closes, the teeth are The post Inside the Steel Jaws of a Great White Shark appeared first on A-Z Animals.

when he went water skiing on Auckland’s Lake Kereta in April, earning him the Guinness World Records title for the oldest water skier (male). Murray started water skiing in 1955 and participated in numerous competitions.

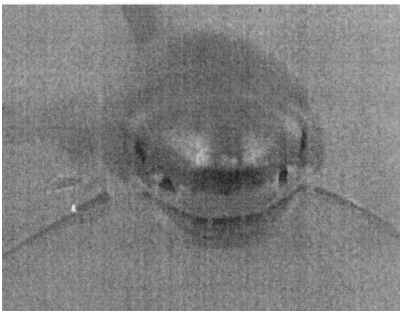

“I didn’t consider it initially but as I got older it became a challenge and I enjoyed it so much I just kept going. Also the family all participated in the sport which took us all over New Zealand for tournaments,” he said. “Most people tell me that I am an inspiration to people of all ages. It encourages me to know that I am leading the way for others to keep active.”

Murray said he has no intention of stopping his favorite activity anytime soon, and plans to extend his record during the summer.

“I like the saying ‘You don’t stop because you are too old. You get old because you stop being active,’” he said.

Be aware: ‘Jaws’ coming to a Rhode Island beach

July 7 (UPI) — Marine researchers in Rhode Island captured video of what might be the first great white shark ever caught on camera in the state’s waters.

The Atlantic Shark Institute said on social media that Executive Director Jon Dodd and Sarah Callan, manager of animal rescue for the Mystic Aquarium, were out on the water recently attempting to locate a humpback whale carcass spotted off the coast.

The duo searched an area of nearly 50 square miles before locating the carcass a few miles off the coast of Block Island.

“As luck would have it, this great white was found feeding on it,” the post said. “At about 8 feet in length it was healthy, well fed and had the whale to itself while we visited!”

The post said the encounter “just might be a first in [Rhode Island] waters.”

Hero family dog saves the day—chases off bear

July 7 (UPI) — A bear that came within feet of a young boy playing in his family’s Connecticut driveway was chased off by the boy’s protective pet dog.

A video shared by Torrington resident Jeff Tazzara shows a bear run onto the driveway while the boy is playing, and the family’s husky rushes into action to chase the bear away, even giving it a nip on the rear-end.

The boy and dog were not injured.

Tazzara said the canine earned a special treat.

“[The dog] always puts herself in between strangers and the kids, but you always wonder in the back of your head, ‘What’s gonna happen if she needs to protect us?’ And now we know, probably a t-bone or something like that, she’ll get to enjoy,” Tazzara told WTNH-TV.

Family of quail rescued by police officer

July 7 (UPI) — A public safety officer in California responded to an unusual call and ended up rescuing a family of baby quail from a storm drain.

The Rohnert Park Department of Public Safety said on social media that Officer Grey responded to Holly Avenue during the weekend on a report of several baby quail that had fallen into a storm drain.

“With a little patience — and help from some nearby homeowners — the tiny birds were safely rescued and reunited with their family,” the post said. “A big thank you to everyone who stopped to help. We appreciate neighbors who are willing to lend a hand when something unexpected happens.”

The department said none of the baby birds were injured and all were safely reunited with their mother.

Misprint? No—you’ve just won a lot of money!

July 7 (UPI) — A Maryland man said he initially thought his scratch-off lottery ticket “most be a misprint” before determining he had won a $100,000 prize.

The Middle River man told Maryland Lottery officials he bought a $10 50X the Cash ticket from Royal Farms on Eastern Avenue in Dundalk and scratched it off later at home.

“I was confused when I saw the ticket. I thought it must be a misprint,” the man said. The player said he had trouble believing the amount of his prize.

“My brain said $100,000, but I thought, ‘It must be $100. This can’t be real,’” he said.

The man said he and his wife talked it over and decided to put the prize money in savings.

“The last thing I want to do is spend it,” he said.

Balloon racer—what are they going to dream up next?

July 9 (UPI) — A Chicago man attempted a Guinness World Record by walking a distance of nearly 33 feet while holding a balloon between his knees.

Sam Farber, 25, who announced his attempt on social media last month, attempted Wednesday to break the Guinness World Record for the fastest 10 meters holding a balloon between the knees.

Farber achieved the feat with a time of 3.5 seconds.

The current record of 3.91 seconds was set by Swedish TV host Rickard Sjöberg in November 2025.

Evidence from Farber’s attempt must now be reviewed by Guinness World Records for his title to become official.

MISSING: Did anyone find a corpse in the road?!

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — A funeral home in Poland issued an unusual apology on Saturday after a corpse that it was transporting fell out of a hearse and into traffic.

Polish media reported that a man was driving down a street Friday in Stalowa Wola, a city in southeastern Poland, when he first saw a sheet on his car window. When the sheet slid down, he saw a body lying on the road. For a moment the driver feared that he had hit the person.

Local media published an image of the corpse lying on a white striped pedestrian crossing where it tumbled out of the hearse.

The company transporting the corpse, Hades Funeral Services, issued a statement Saturday taking responsibility for the incident and blaming a technical failure of the hearse.

“It is with deep regret that we inform you that as a result of an unexpected technical failure of the electric tailgate lock in the hearse, during the transport of the body of the deceased, an unfortunate event occurred which does not reflect the high standards of our company, our deep empathy towards the families of the deceased, and the respect we always show to the deceased,” the company wrote in a statement posted on its website.

It apologized to “all those who were disappointed and upset by this event.”
