Many words written on tiny sticky

A United Arab Emirates woman broke a Guinness World Record by managing to hand-write 150 different words onto a single sticky note.

Pushpajothi Ravikumar, 29, put her skills at tiny writing to the test in Dubai by taking on the record for the most words written on a sticky note.

"Since childhood, I've watched Guinness World Records and always dreamed of being part of it. Seeing people achieve these records inspired me deeply. One day the idea just clicked, and I decided to take the leap and apply," Ravikumar said.

She said she had to get creative to ensure all the words would fit while remaining legible.

"I chose simple, short words — mostly three letters — to make the most of the space," Ravikumar said.

Fire-fighters put out the flames

At approximately 4:15 a.m. on August 15, Engine 13-1 was dispatched to a reported structure fire on Jack Tone Road.

Engine 13-1 arrived first on scene and found a shop fully involved with heavy smoke and flames. Multiple engines and water tenders arrived shortly afterward, working together to quickly bring the fire under control. We would like to thank our neighboring agencies, Waterloo Morada Fire District, Clements firefighters, and Liberty-fire district12, for their assistance on scene, as well as Linden Peters fire for providing district coverage while our crews operated at the incident.

County keeps cautious eye on AI buzz

As a precautionary and proactive measure, the San Joaquin County Board of Supervisors voted to direct County staff to study the potential impacts of large-scale artificial intelligence (AI) data centers in San Joaquin County and explore whether new land-use regulations are needed.

"The County does not currently have land-use regulations specifically addressing the unique size, intensity, and resource demands of large-scale artificial intelligence and similar high-intensity data centers. Because there are no existing facilities or active applications, that gives us an important opportunity to be proactive - to establish appropriate policies before an application is submitted, rather than trying to address these complex issues after the fact," District Five Supervisor Robert Rickman stated.

There are currently no active applications for data centers and no data centers operating in unincorporated San Joaquin County. However, communities across the country are examining the potential impacts of large-scale data centers, including their demands on water and electricity, local infrastructure, emergency services, and surrounding land uses. Concerns have also been raised about the potential for increased noise, traffic and other impacts on nearby communities.

"We want to have protocols in place and have done our homework before this becomes an issue for our community," said District One Supervisor Mario Gardea. "We can't deny that AI is becoming a part of everyday life. But we can be ready."

At the Board's direction, Community Development Department (CDD) will gather community (See page 4—AI)

“Are we sinners because we sin or do we sin because we are sinners?” asked the Sunday school teacher. An immediate debate erupted in the class as the members attempted to sort out the issues. Finally, Jess quoted Romans 3:23, “For all have sinned and fall short of the glory of God.” “Seems to me,” he continued, “that if everyone ‘falls short’ we must all be sinners be-cause we all sin. Someone other than Jesus might have slipped through. Certainly, not me.”

In Psalm 32 David uses the words transgress and sin. Transgress means to step across or to go beyond a set boundary. It carries with it the idea of an athlete stepping out of bounds while compet-ing in a contest. The word sin means to miss the mark - like failing a test or not meeting a specific standard. If we recognize God’s laws as boundaries, we would all have to admit that we have stepped beyond the limits for right living that God set. And where is that person who can say that they have hit the target and meet every standard that God has set? Though David speaks of iniquity, sin and transgres-sion, he emphasizes forgive-ness and the fact that our sins can be removed. He writes, “Blessed is the man whose sin the Lord does not count against him.” Paul quotes these same words in Romans. Thank God that Paul explains what we are to do if we want our sins removed: “For by grace you can be saved - your sins removed - through God's gift!"

Nothing is more important for those who own homes along the Italian Rivera than to have a balcony. Those who do not have a balcony have an image of one painted on their house. They want to give the impres-sion that they have what others have - a place where they gather to view the Rivera. “Painted-on balconies” are designed to give an illusion of the “real deal.” From a dis-tance they may look real. But when viewed closely, they are false - they are “pretend” balconies. Many individuals want to give the impression that they are Christians - the real deal. But when observed closely, they too have “painted-on balco-nies.” The Living Bible talks about “pretenders.” Writing to the Thessalonians, Paul said, “Check up on yourselves. Are you really a Christian? Or are you just pretending to be Christians when actually you are not at all?” “Pretenders” only deceive themselves. Whatever is “paintedon” will some day be seen for what it is or will fade away completely. Faith is like that. If it is real, it will be evidenced in our lives.

Linden unfortunately couldn't capitalize on their home-field advantage in their season opener. They took a 15-7 hit to the loss column at the hands of the East Nicolaus Spartans on last week..

Even though they lost, Linden was charging into the backfield all evening and finished the game with three sacks. That marked a season-low in sacks for them.

Despite the result, Linden's defense still kept up the pressure with three sacks. It was truly a group effort as Lincoln Ly, Dominic Vaccarezza, and Jackson Bottoms picked up one apiece.

Linden State rep advances key legislation

Assemblyman Heath Flora has advanced bipartisan bills that were approved by the Senate today and the Assembly previously; they reflect the priorities of the Assemblyman by caring for California families, public safety and health workers.

“These bills are about solving real-world problems,” said Assemblyman Flora. “Improving public safety and rural hospitals are key to ensuring communities have solutions that matter.”

Bills passed by both chambers of the Legislature awaiting Governor’s signature or veto:

AB 2129 – State employees: compensation for firefighters, strengthening the pay for state firefighters and ensuring retention amongst state employees. After the Governor vetoed the original bill in 2025, Flora reintroduced it, and it once again passed both chambers unanimously.

AB 2571 – Reimbursement for pharmacist services, amending state law to improve reimbursement for pharmacist services for Medi-Cal and other health providers. The bill passed the Senate and the Assembly unopposed and with bipartisan support.

“I am proud to have had bipartisan support on these bills,” said Assemblyman Flora. “Honoring our public safety workers and ensuring our communities are taken care of are beneficial causes for the communities that we represent.”

California’s state firefighters are burdened with some of the most demanding conditions within the state and, as such, ensuring they maintain competitive pay with their local counterparts is essential. This approach is ultimately designed to ensure that California’s public safety efforts are strengthened in the long run.

Lodi man arrested with with 50 pounds of meth
Traffic stop leads to discovery of a large amount of narcotics

A vehicle travelling northbound on Interstate 5 near Dog Creek Road was stopped for a traffic violation by California Highway Patrol (CHP) officers. The driver of the vehicle was identified as 26-year-old Rion Hendrix Scovil, of Lodi.

During the traffic stop, a large amount of narcotics was located. Approximately 50 pounds of methamphetamine, 5 pounds of fentanyl, and 2 pounds of cocaine was found. After discovering the suspected narcotics, the Shasta Interagency Narcotics Task Force (SINTF) was contacted and responded to assume the investigation.

SINTF detectives arrested Scovil and booked him into the Shasta County Jail on charges of 11378 HS Possess Controlled Substance For Sale, 11379(a) HS Transport/Etc. Controlled Substance, 11351 HS Possess/Purchase For Sale Narcotic/Controlled Substance, and 11352(a) HS Transport/Sell Narcotic/Controlled Substance. Scovil's bail is set at $2,000,000.

input and conduct research. This process is expected to take approximately six months to complete. CDD will then present its findings to the Board.

"We need to put our residents first," said Chair and District Three Supervisor Sonny Dhaliwal. "It's critical to get our community's input, especially when we're talking about the potential impacts and stresses a data center could place on our quality of life."

It's expected that in October, after CDD shares its initial findings, the Board will consider an initial 45-day moratorium on the approval of data center projects while an ordinance is being considered.

Gunman shot dead

On 08/24/26 at approximately 9:30AM, Lodi Police Department dispatch received a report of an armed suspect inside McDonald's (200 W Lodi Ave).

Upon arrival, officers heard gunfire from within the restaurant and discovered an employee who had been shot. Officers made their way toward the gunshots, where they encountered the armed suspect, and an officer-involved shooting occurred.

The officers secured the scene and called emergency personnel to assist, but the suspect was ultimately pronounced deceased on scene. The employee victim who was shot was transported to a local hospital, where she is in stable condition.

The suspect has been identified as Jonhatan Anguiano, a 29 year old male.

This investigation is being conducted in accordance with the San Joaquin County Officer Involved Critical Incident Protocol.

The protocol investigation involves members of the Lodi

Police Department, San Joaquin County District Attorney's Office, and the California Department of Justice.

At this time, the investigation is ongoing. More information will be released as it becomes available.

If there are any outstanding witnesses, or individuals with additional information, please contact Detective Blythe, at (209)333-5545.

The attached photos depict surveillance video of the armed suspect and the firearm recovered from the scene.

Tight lines ...

Near the southern flank of Mount Shasta, springs and snow-melt converge to form the McCloud River. This Sacramento River tributary, held sacred by the Winnemem Wintu tribe, teemed with Chinook salmon “The winter run was the main sustenance source for the Winnemem Wintu throughout history,” said tribal member Gary Mulcahy. “We consider them the grandfather of all salmon.”

For several years, Winnemem Wintu leaders have collaborated with state and federal officials to reintroduce the critically endangered fish to this wilderness waterway in a historic effort to revitalize the McCloud and reconnect with their past. But a federal proposal to increase the height of Shasta Dam by more than 18 feet to provide more water to farmers now threatens the tribe's land and could harm salmon runs.

Contemplated for decades and gaining traction among Republican lawmakers, the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation's proposed Shasta Dam and Reservoir Enlargement Project would boost the capacity of California's largest reservoir.

Since President Donald Trump took office for his second term, the federal government has not mounted any public effort to raise the dam. But Trump has taken several steps in that direction, including signing executive orders instructing federal officials to waive environmental rules and deliver more water to California growers.

Recently, the dam project appeared to get a push in the House Natural Resources Committee's budget reconciliation bill, with a designation of $2 billion “for construction and associated activities that increase the capacity of existing Bureau of Reclamation surface water storage facilities.” Though the budget language does not name Shasta Dam, experts say it's precisely crafted to facilitate the project.

“There's no mystery here,” said Barry Nelson, policy advisor with the Golden State Salmon Association. “That language is designed to push the Shasta raise.”

Raising the dam was the “number-one priority” water project for the first Trump administration, Nelson said.

However, U.S. Rep. Doug LaMalfa, a Republican whose district includes Shasta and who helped draft the budget language, told CalMatters that while he endorses enlarging Shasta Dam, the reconciliation bill's “funding is not for any specific project.”

Last year, a bill that would have allocated funds for enlarging the dam while prohibiting state laws from obstructing the project died in the House. It was sponsored by 12 California Republicans, including LaMalfa.

The Bureau of Reclamation estimated in 2014 that enlarging Shasta Dam would cost $1.4 billion — roughly $1.8 billion in today's dollars. Obtaining the array of state and federal permits for the dam could take years, and is likely to face court challenges.

The project would provide an additional 51,300 acre-feet of water per year to recipients — mainly farmers — of the Central Valley Project and the State Water Project, according to a federal estimate. That would increase the amount they receive on average by less than 1% , which Ron Stork, a policy expert with the group Friends of the River, referred to as “decimal dust.” The dam project would claim some of the Winnemem Wintu's last remaining territory and could violate the state's Wild and Scenic Rivers Act, which explicitly prohibits constructing reservoirs on the McCloud's final miles before entering Lake Shasta. State officials have publicly opposed the project in the past. In 2013, the California Department of Fish and Wildlife said raising the dam would have “significant and unavoidable impacts” on the Sacramento River ecosystem. The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service has similarly warned federal officials that the project would restrict high-water flows and reduce fish habitat.

State officials declined to comment for this story. Bureau of Reclamation spokesperson Peter Soeth also declined to comment. Stork, a longtime opponent of the dam raise, said the Trump administration is liable to ignore the state law. Trump's January executive order directed federal officials to deliver more water through the Central Valley Project “by increasing storage and conveyance ... notwithstanding any contrary State or local laws.”“We certainly expect some serious mischief here,” Stork said. “The president's executive order more or less says, ‘Please find ways to accomplish my agenda by trying to get around state and federal law.’”

Mulcahy, the Winnemem Wintu's government liaison, said Lake Shasta flooded 90% of his tribe's historical territory. “Village sites, sacred sites, cultural gathering sites,” he said.

Increasing the dam's height will do even more damage, he said, periodically inundating many important gathering places, including the Kabyai Creek burial ground, where dozens of tribal members were laid to rest after a vicious 1854 massacre by white settlers.

It would also flood a cleansing pool for Winnemem men, a riverside dancing mesa and a young women's coming-of-age ceremony site called Puberty Rock. This, Mulcahy said, will fray some of the last remaining cultural threads holding together the tribe, which he said consists of about 140 members.

“We wouldn’t be able to hold the ceremonies that are necessary to fulfill our spiritual and cultural needs,” he said. The Winnemem Wintu are not included on the official list of federally recognized tribes, which could limit their influence over the project.

Polarizing farmers and environmentalists

Like many Delta and Central Valley water supply projects, the Shasta Dam raise has polarized farmers and environmentalists in a dispute over how it would affect Chinook salmon.

Environmentalists and fishery advocates say it will imperil already declining salmon populations, while project proponents, including the Westlands Water District, say it will help the ecosystem. Westlands provides water, imported mostly from the Delta, to San Joaquin Valley farmers who grow 150,000 acres of pistachios and almonds — their main crops — as well as other fruits, grains and vegetables.

But General Manager Allison Febbo said the Shasta project isn’t directly about water supply. Rather, she said, it’s meant to help fish. Febbo explained that increasing the reservoir’s volume will keep its water colder, which is essential for spawning.

If the plight of the fish improves, Febbo said, regulations on water diversions might be eased — which would amount to an indirect benefit to water users like Westlands.

“We keep getting ratcheted down as the species continues to decline, so our water supply isn’t going to get any better until the species gets better,” Febbo said.

LaMalfa also stressed that the project would be “a win-win” by increasing water storage and better insulating the reservoir’s cold-water pool.

“More water for people and more cold water for salmon,” the congressman said.

But Nelson, at the Golden State Salmon Association, said Shasta Dam has already “been absolutely catastrophic for salmon.”

“The idea that a Shasta raise would benefit salmon — particularly under this set of federal agencies — is absurd,” he said.

Completed in 1945, the dam blocked Chinook from reaching hundreds of miles of stream habitat. For the winter-run Chinook — whose unique life cycle involves residing and spawning in freshwater through summer — the ice-cold McCloud was their stronghold.

“It can be 110 degrees in the canyon there, and you can be standing in the river in waders and your legs are so cold it hurts,” said Rene Henery, California science director with the group Trout Unlimited, as he explained the importance of the McCloud to the future survival of winter-run Chinook.

Today, the fish — which enter freshwater in the winter — cling to existence in a short stretch of river downstream of Lake Shasta, surviving thanks to the release of cold water stored deep in the reservoir. However, this resource frequently runs out in the summer as the fish lay and fertilize their eggs.

sented to the most unusual pet insurance claim of the year, was given to a golden retriever who spent 72 days lost in the mountains.

Nationwide Pet Insurance said Milo Bear was spooked by a sudden noise during a Christmas Day trip to the mountains near Lake Tahoe in California and fled up a cross-country ski trail.

Milo was missing for 72 days before turning up at a shelter, extremely thin but otherwise unharmed. He was able to return home to his family after four days in a veterinary hospital.

“The joy of being reunited with a beloved pet after weeks of uncertainty is hard to put into words. Milo’s journey reflects the determination of his family, his own incredible resilience, and the importance of getting pets the care they need when the unexpected happens. Stories like his are exactly what the Hambone Awards were created to celebrate,” Emily Tincher, chief veterinary officer at Nationwide, said in a news release.

The Hambone Award, which “recognizes the most unusual pet claim of the year,” is named in honor of a dog who became trapped inside his owner’s refrigerator and ate an entire ham, leaving only the bone behind.

Henry, a Colorado Labrador retriever who chased a tennis ball into his yard and punctured his paw on a rake, was one of this year’s runners-up. The other runner-up was a cat named Hobbes who ran under his owner’s garage door as it was closing and became pinned.

Other nominees from this year included twin beagles Diesel and Matilda, who ate an entire two-tiered red velvet cake; a Bernese mix named Capone who swallowed an entire intact baseball cover; a Goldendoodle named Hampden who ate the skin off a vintage Ugandan drum; and borzoi dogs Lilliya and Noelle, who got into double mischief when Lilliya swallowed an entire bottle’s worth of Rimadyl and then Noelle feasted on her sister’s vomit.

All of the pets have since made full recoveries.

Workers lift train to find lost ring

A New Jersey woman who accidentally flushed her wedding ring down a train toilet was reunited with the precious object thanks to NJ Transit employees.

Julie Angelicola said she had just left the bathroom aboard an NJ Transit train when she realized her wedding ring was missin

“So I’m kind of meticulously getting all of this soap off of my hands with toilet paper and literally going finger by finger, and crumpling it all up, trying to do it quickly - threw it in the toilet, flushed the toilet, went back to my seat,” Angelicola told WPVI-TV.

She reported the ring’s loss to NJ Transit, which took the train out of service.

Employees put the train up on jacks, removed the toilet tank and opened it up to discover Angelicola’s ring on top.

The ring was returned to Angelicola on Monday at a NJ Transit Customer Service Center.

Angelicola said the ring has immense sentimental value. The ring, believed to date back to 1905, was purchased from an antique store and Angelicola only later discovered that the initials engraved inside the ring matched the nicknames she and her husband have for each other.

Sheep slips aboard bus at car wash

An escaped sheep boarded a parked bus in Germany and took a trip through the giant-sized car wash before being reunited with its owner.

The Coesfeld Police said on social media that the sheep escaped from its pasture and wandered onto bus company RVM’s property in Lüdinghausen.

The sheep climbed aboard a parked bus that had been left unlocked and was discovered by the vehicle’s driver when they returned to do a walk-through for litter.

RVM contacted local police and rancher Stefan Naber, who was identified as the sheep’s owner by a plastic tag in its ear.

Bus company officials said the sheep took a ride through the facility’s bus-sized car wash while waiting for its owner to arrive.

The animal remained calm and cooperative throughout its brief bus trip.

Naber was able to transfer the sheep to a trailer for safe transport home.

RVM spokesman Tino Nitsch said employees were delighted by the unexpected passenger and the sheep will get an article in the next issue of the company’s employee magazine.

On 18th b-day lottery player get big payday

An Ohio man stopped at a gas station just after midnight on his 18th birthday and walked out with a lottery ticket worth $10,000.

The Lewis Center resident, identified only as Austin, told Ohio Lottery officials he and a friend stopped at a gas station just after midnight on Aug. 6, his 18th birthday.

Austin decided to buy a scratch-off lottery ticket as “sort of a joke” since it was finally legal for him to do so, and he selected a $20 $300 Million Diamond Dazzler game.

The player’s beginner’s luck paid off with a $10,000 prize.

Austin’s friend, who is a year older than him, joked: “This is not how adult life goes!”

The winner said he is planning to put his winnings toward a new vehicle.

‘Jaws’ attacks at Martha’s Vineyard

Swimming at South Beach at Martha’s Vineyard, Mass. was halted for several hours Monday after a woman suffered injuries that may have been from a shark bite, according to officials.

First responders were called to Norton Point at 1:40 p.m. after the woman sustained wounds to her lower leg while she was in the water, the town said in a statement.

No sharks or other marine animals were observed or confirmed in connection with the incident, however the lacerations were consistent with a shark bite, according to the town.

Rescuers brought the woman, who is in her late 20s, to the hospital for treatment. Her injuries were not considered life-threatening, and did not involve a loss of limb.

After the incident, the town shut down swimming along South Beach.

“The temporary restriction will allow Town personnel to assess conditions before reopening the water to swimming,” the town wrote.

The town urged beachgoers to remain aware of their surroundings while in the water.

Sharks are regularly found around the Cape and Islands, though great whites are more often spotted off Cape Cod than the Vineyard. Other species of shark, such as brown sharks, are also in the area.

Beach managers have shut down swimming in other parts of the Island this season.

Chilmark closed Lucy Vincent and Squibnocket beach earlier in August after a large congregation of animals was spotted off the beach. Beach superintendent Martina Mastromonaco said the town received reports of sharks, but she couldn’t tell for sure what lifeguards were seeing.

“My guards did see a lot of things out in the water swimming,” she told the Gazette earlier this month. “It could have been a bunch of dolphins.”
